1. Introduction

Despite the large numbers of box turtles imported into Europe until 1995, there seem to be relatively few left in Europe. Some of the box turtle subspecies have studbook status 'A' though, meaning that they are threatened in the wild or are expected to do so in the near future, and that captive breeding could become essential for survival of the subspecies.

8. Discussion

The studbook Terrapene has been transferred to undersigned since October 2003. Due to circumstances, the former studbook keeper was unable to put the Terrapene data into Sparks. As a result, the main goal for 2003 has been to enter all available data into Sparks. During the entry it became clear that a number of studbook forms could not be used before contacting the owners for clarification. This needs to be done in 2004. In addition, the data on the studbook forms gave some concerns with respect to the correctness of subspecies determination. It is true that determination can be difficult in Terrapene, especially because the subspecies are known to interbreed if their home ranges overlap, but some of the examples I've seen in the studbook forms are certainly questionable. One way to avoid this in the future is to provide determination keys and examples. To do so, a website has been set up: www.terrapene.nl.

The website has been constructed to provide information on all aspects of keeping and breeding Terrapene. It will hopefully also be an instrument to get into contact with Terrapene owners not yet registered. The website will provide information on the studbook and will contain registry forms and mutation forms, making it more easy for Terrapene owners to inform the studbook keeper. Terrapene owners will be able to contact each other through the website as well. Studbook participators will be given access to the studbook data in order to be able to have a look at the data entered.

Despite the fact that there are hundreds of T. c. triunguis in the studbook, there have not been updates on breeding results in 2003. Breeding has also not been reported for T. c. major. For T. c. carolina and T. o. ornata, breeding took place at only 2 locations each. It could be that studbook participants lack information on how to breed Terrapene. This can be resolved by providing them with this information, for example through the website. Another factor however could be that the studbook participators are not motivated enough to report their breeding results. Motivation can only be achieved by good communication.

The studbooks of T. c. mexicana, and T. o. luteola are critical, containing only 1 specimen each. For T. c. bauri, there is 1 single specimen in The Netherlands. Without breeding, their bloodlines will be lost for future generations. Efforts will be made to find a mate for these specimens within their own subspecies. Interbreeding with another subspecies is currently not preferred. Generally speaking, it would be good if studbook participants keeping only 1 animal, or keeping animals of the same sex contact the studbook keeper to clarify if they are interested in breeding at all, and to look at the possibilities of exchange.

So far, the Terrapene studbook has operated mainly with Dutch participators. Now that most of the Dutch data is in order, it is time to expand the view to other countries within Europe, creating possibilities for animal and (thus gene) exchange.

Aims for the year 2004 (in summary):

- Contact owners for clarification of studbook forms
- Contact owners keeping single specimens/specimens of 1 sex to ask for breeding interests
- Find mates for single specimens
- Finalize website
- Motivate studbook participants through communication
- Get into contact with Terrapene owners outside The Netherlands
